

What do You do for the Summer?

One of the ways we seek to develop Christ-centered laborers on campus is by challenging students to invest their breaks from school for the Kingdom of God! Whether it's a conference over Christmas vacation or an evangelism training week in PCB over spring break, we want to build into students over their breaks. The summer is no different! This summer, around 2,500 American students will participate in Summer Projects all over the U.S. and the world! This summer, Abbie and I are staffing the San Diego Summer project—a 10-week discipleship-, evangelism- and leadership-training missions project. We arrived in San Diego mid-May, two weeks before the arrival of 120 college students from all over the country! The San Diego Summer Project holds a special place in our hearts because it's where Abbie and I met as students in the summer of 2003! The Lord really confirmed both of our calls to ministry while we were here as students, so we feel blessed to be here and lead students toward becoming life-time laborers for Christ!

Wasting No Time

During the 10 weeks they spend here, students get jobs in the SD area. Their jobs become one of their primary ministry locations! Finding jobs for all our students in a slow economy has proved challenging, but we have seen the Lord place our students in jobs where they have already had opportunities to share the Gospel! Omega, who had been looking for a job, was just walking past a local coffee shop, when the manager grabbed her and asked her if she could work—right away! She was hired on the spot. Omega's manager is from Turkey, and is open to talking about spiritual things!

DJ had never shared his faith with a stranger before. During one of our beach outreaches, DJ and Mike started a spiritual conversation with Eric. DJ, to his surprise, found out that Eric was really interested in what he and Mike had to say. As they were sharing the gospel, Eric became emotional and told them that he was really grateful for what Jesus had done for him. After asking Eric if he wanted to follow Christ and accept His payment for his sins, Eric said yes and they prayed with him!

Thank you so much for your role in students' lives! Be on the lookout for our project newsletter designed by students and filled with more stories from the summer!
